

NFL Mock Draft 2019

By: Austin Ragland

April 23, 2019

Fast approaching the NFL draft, teams have been uncharacteristically quiet regarding pre-draft trades or plans compared to recent years. This is especially surprising considering how much movement has taken place so far this offseason throughout the biggest free agent frenzy in league history. Up to this point, analysts have spent the majority of their time speculating the possibility of Kyler Murray going number one overall to the Arizona Cardinals. Not to be overshadowed, this draft features the best group of pass rushers and interior linemen in the last decade. Just one year after a draft stacked at the Quarterback position, this class is just the opposite as its most talented player's job is to sack the QB. Generational talents such as Nick Bosa and Quinnen Williams have also been injected into the conversation of the first overall selection of the draft. Another big storyline leading up to Thursday are the two Tight Ends from Iowa T.J. Hockenson and Noah Fant. In fact, some even believe the Patriots will trade up in hopes of landing the next Gronk if such a thing exists. On the topic of finding replacements, the Giants, Bengals, and Dolphins are all in the market for finding replacing long time veteran Quarterbacks in the back nine of their careers. One name that is sure to be circulated around the league on the first night of the draft is Josh Rosen, as his future with the Cardinals is uncertain with the start of a new regime and offensive system under Kliff Kingsbury. Although the waters have been calm up to this point, things are sure to intensify as Roger Goodell draws 'boos' from the draft audience in Nashville on Thursday.
